Description: Kansas City, MO : The Foundry Publishing, 2022. | Series: Christian theology ; volume 1 | Includes bibliographical references. | Contents: Part 1. Faith and history — Part 2. Christology — Part 3. Soteriology : the doctrine of the work of Christ. | Summary: "The Grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ is the first volume of a three-volume systematic, Christian Theology. The volume is in three parts. Part 1, Faith and History, introduces Christian Theology, explaining why it begins with Christ. It also reviews what is known about Jesus historically and the faith in which he was brought up—the faith in the God of Israel. This part concludes with an examination of the resurrection of Jesus. Part 2, Christology: The Doctrine of the Person of Christ, begins with theology as 'faith seeking understanding'. It is faith in the Gospel that the crucified Christ is risen from the dead, and this faith in turn issues in the confession that Jesus Christ is 'Lord'. From here, part 2 traces the logic of the Church's development of Christology, the doctrine of the Person of Christ, from Scripture and, specifically, from the apostolic Gospel. Part 3, Soteriology: The Doctrine of the Work of Christ, investigates the 'Grace' of God seen in the doctrine of the Atonement as an aspect of Christology. Throughout the entire volume, Biblical, Historical, and Systematic Theology are integrated, drawing on major historical works of Theology and on contemporary scholarship."— Provided by publisher.

■ Preface

From one point of view, Christian Theology is the belief system of one particular faith community within human society. As citizens, Christians may legitimately respect that perspective, particularly in democratic societies, and may live as far as they can within the limits which society sets down. But that is not the Christian view. For Christians, Christian Theology is not merely an abstract or theoretical belief system of one religious group but is the articulation of our personal, interactive knowledge of the Triune God, the Creator of the ends of the earth and the universal Lord of all, within the fellowship of the Church which God has called into being. For us, therefore, it is not 'the world' of human society which sets the ultimate horizon within which Christian faith must be understood and regulated. Rather, it is the revelation of the Triune God in Jesus Christ, known only through the work of the Holy Spirit, which determines the final horizon within which we view 'the world'. Christian Theology is the Church's fallible attempt to articulate that knowledge given in the revelation of God, including the understanding of ourselves and of human society which arises within that perspective. For Christians, Christ, not Caesar, is Lord.

This particular work, entitled Christian Theology, is the attempt of one Christian theologian to articulate that knowledge. If it were merely a personal view, it could be regarded as idiosyncratic. Therefore it is an attempt to articulate Christian
